This week, our BAs brought their draft document to their professor to have him critique its deliverable. There is many problems within the deliverable that is present it has seems. We went over some of the deliverable and help them with their use cases mainly. Their use cases was due this week and they were having trouble creating it. We walk them through and explain them the concept of use cases and what was needed in each use one. When going through the use cases, we connected it to their prototype and how each person uses it. This draws out a better picture for them to write up the use cases and understand it better. Next week we are hoping that their deliverable is edited and have a better understand of their overall prototype design.